Over three decades ago, Arima introduced the Sea Hunter 15'. As the widest and deepest in her class, this boat was quickly accepted and soon became every fisherman's dream. Arima's reputation has since grown for durability, design features and functional usage. We carried these concepts and principles to our 16, 17, 19, 21 and 22 footers, which have all surpassed the satisfaction and expectations of our customers for almost four decades.

ARIMA BOATS CONSTRUCTION

Arima Boats are built using the finest in composite materials available today.

Our construction method uses no wood materials so you can rest assured that your boat is built to last and the structural components of the boat will never rot or fail. With wood constructed stringers and transoms, structural failure is just one screw away. Many builders will tell you that they encapsulate the wood well enough that the wood never comes in contact with water and therefore it will never rot. This is a very optimistic approach. Failures in wood stringers and wood floors do happen. Imagine having to replace a soft floor, or replace the stringers in a boat that is often less than 10 years old.

Why take the risk? Buy a boat that can't rot, and you don't have to worry every time you install a new option on your boat whether every screw was installed and sealed perfectly. You shouldn't have to worry about whether the materials in your boat will fail, you just need to worry about where you're going fishing next.

Don't make the mistake of buying a boat made from less expensive wood materials. Buy the finest sport fishing boats from the very beginning.
